ARTIST STATEMENT

I paint what I am trying to understand.

I paint what I am trying to make peace with.

I paint what I can't make peace with.

I cannot paint anything as it is, in the still shot interpretation.

I paint notions, intangibles, abstract concepts, and emotions.

I paint Passion, Compartmentalization, Democracy, Rage, myself, addiction, situations, events, conflict, sex, dreams, hopes, and vague memories.

Painting brings things to light that are part of our lives that I never put words to. Painting brings out the meanings of nuances and custom, it inspires and really generates epiphanies about how life works for me. These deep philosophical revelations do not come to me when I am not painting. But when I paint, it is like meditation, and it all spills out. The truth is there for all to see and I feel more like a conduit than an artist.

With no exceptions, my art is not something that I envisioned beforehand and created. Sometimes I have a basic framework, but most of the time I do not. For me, painting is a process of discovery, of chiseling and chipping away until the work is done. That is why it is so enlightening and so fun to do. Creating art and discovering truth is something I truly enjoy doing and that is a big reason I do it.

My paintings fall into a new category of paintings called Abstract Symbolism. They are definitely abstract, but everything signifies something. Not only do the lines and objects they create mean something, the colors mean something, and the textures mean something. What is really unique about my art is that I write the meanings of the paintings so the viewer can understand what everything symbolizes and what I think it means. Not that the beholder cannot derive and assign their own meaning, but this shares my perspective on the work. I think my art is unique, colorful, and provocative. It really is something different and something meaningful. Call or email for more information or to work together.
